Fig. 2.--Variation of Capacity. capacity of the condenser is represented by the horizontal it tance measured from S, such as S Q , the scale for capacity being so chosen that when $K_{hp} = 1$ the length SO represents the corresponding value of K. Then for any value, S Q fa the capacity K, the inductance l/Kp must be inversely preportional to S Q and must be SQ where $SQ.SQ = SP$ The point Q can easily be found graphically by describing s semi-circle on S O as diameter, finding by compasses the point P on the vertical from O, for which $SP = S Q$, joining S P. cutting the circle in P, and finding Q such that $SP=SQ$, Fig. 3.--Variation of Frequency. Similarly, the point R corresponding with any values S R the capacity can be easily found. Now S O is the inductance of the coil, or hp , while SR is the inductance, l/K , of condenser when the capacity is represented by S R . So that R O is equal to the difference $L p - 1/K p$ of the two inducts It follows that if $O A$ is the resistance of the coil, the length RA represents the voltage needed to make a giren current w through the conductors when the capacity is equal to...
