So it ma v have some merit. LENS SHADES J. FREDERIC W. HARRIS i ERY little attention seems to be given by the average photographer to the subject of light interference on the plate from other points than those of the object which is being photographed. This extraneous light interference is responsible for more loss of brilliancy and contrast than is generally supposed. The best proof of this is to photograph an outdoor subject which is near or surrounded by reflecting surfaces, such as white walls, water, etc. Take several photographs, beginning with the lens pointing directly away from the sun, then in other positions extending as far as one hundred degrees on both sides of the first position. Try one set of pictures with the lens unprotected and another set with an improvised lens shade of cardboard,...
